

Marco Mencoboni

harpsichordist, organist, conductor

Marco Mencoboni is a musician born in 1961 in Macerata (Marche Region).

He treated music as a soloist, conductor, record producer, film producer, actor and writer.

He began his studies as composer and organist in 1976 in the Conservatorio Rossini in Pesaro with Umberto Pineschi moving then to Bologna following his teacher, where he got his diploma in 1985. In 1984 he enrolled for harpsichord at Amsterdam's Sweelinck Conservatory invited by Ton Koopman, later transferring in 1987 into the class of Gustav Leonhardt with whom he finished his studies in 1990. The next time he entered a school as a student was in 2009 and the motivation was to follow the lessons in renaissance polyphony by Prof Diego Fratelli at the Conservatorio in Lecce.

In the early 90s he became a music entrepreneur, record producer, artistic director of festivals - leaving behind solo activity which nobody, least of all himself, was interested in any longer.

The need and the desire to create a vocal ensemble arose from the rediscovery, in 1993, of the ancient practice of Cantar Lontano, at the time known only by musicologists but never put into practice. The practice of Cantar Lontano (which, according to its inventor Ignazio Donati, did not require a director) nevertheless initially undertook a series of experiments and attempts aimed at conducting musicians placed at a distance from each other.

The need to learn a modern directional technique, easily understood by today's orchestras, arose when work started with some symphony orchestras and with very demanding productions such as Gioachino Rossini's Otello.

Since 2017 he is in charge of the Monteverdi Project in Malta.

Today he performs regularly as a performer and conductor all over the world.
